

As a cell phone user I believe that proposed cellular telephone use on airplanes is a very bad idea. There is no inherit right for cell phone users to take over every public space whether indoors or outdoors. Allowing airspace to be violated will subject passengers to conversations that they cannot escape from. This invasion of public space by cell phone addicts brings a host of problems including social conflict and animosity that will impact everyone in that confined space. The flight crew will have to deal with annoyed passengers who, in turn might take matters into their own hands which will make everyone uncomfortable. Additionally any costs incurred by airlines to allow cellular use will be passed on to consumers. I urge you to reconsider the serious social problems and costs presented by this proposal.

Thank you,

Kate B. Littleboy